When it Comes to Things like Love

The Breakdown's first new single of 2023 explores well-trodden themes of lost love, but from the perspective of a solitary Elvis impersonator who explore fantastic far-flung worlds of xenomorphic aliens and department store mannequins. While our protagonist battles with his inner demons, the music lends itself to the more imminent threat of confronting the intergalactic space-elephants that wish to tear him apart.

The Breakdown are a melodic rock band based in London and founded in 2019 by teenage friends from around the southeast. Formed out of the ashes of a previous band and reuniting after a chance encounter 15-years later, the quartet began just 3 weeks before the nationwide lockdowns. During this time the band had been working hard on writing new material for their recently released debut album. At its heart is a classic rock album with modern sensibilities that follows the well-trodden British musical tradition. Elements of XTC and The Smiths can be found mingled across their songs, along with more contemporary musical influences. It broods in crushing guitars and arpeggiated synths, but this is no pop-homage; whilst the tracks lure with catchy riffs, killer melodies, and nostalgic lyrics; beneath the surface there are undercurrents of despair at modernity.
